Q1: Read the text and answer the following questions:

One day a 73-year-old American called Teri Horton saw a large colourful painting in a California thrift shop. She had never bought such a big painting before but she liked the colours and thought it would be a fun present for a friend who was depressed, so she bought it for $5. (The shop assistant had asked for $8 but Teri was good at bargaining.) After she had bought it, she took it to her friend's house. The friend, however, didn't like the painting, and anyway, they hadn't managed to get it through the door and into her home, so Teri decided to sell it at a yard sale. A local Art teacher saw it and thought it looked familiar. Had a famous artist painted it? Teri didn't know. Before she retired, she'd worked as a truck driver and she was no art expert. But she soon found out that the painting was in the style of a world-famous abstract artist who had died in 1956 and whose paintings sell for millions. Unfortunately, nobody had signed the painting and some experts claimed it wasn't authentic. However, after an expert had found a fingerprint on the painting that seemed to be from a world-famous abstract artist, a buyer offered her $9 million. She turned it down. She says she won't sell it for less than $50 million.
